

CHAPTER 3

- A. The speaker asks his lover to come and be his lover. They can live with pleasure among natural surroundings - hills, valleys, dales and fields and all the craggy mountains.
- B. A large number of Assyrian troops with its full splendid power galloped to attack their enemy like the wolf on the fold eager to kill. Their weapons were gleaming as if there were stars dancing at night in the blue waves on the sea of Galilee.
- C. Since his/her love affair cannot be rescued from failure, the lover decides to separate from his/her beloved. He/She proposes to have a last kiss before parting for good. He/She would not spare himself/herself for love-making with him/her any longer. He/She is rather glad that he/she has been able to free himself/herself of the lover completely.
- D. The speaker knows that he is going to have his fate decided among the clouds in the sky; he does not hate the people he is fighting and he does not love the people he is guarding.
- E. Beautiful daffodils we, the people, are sad to see you dying so quickly. The sun had not yet reached its noon position. Stay alive at least until the early part of the evening. (This could mean until the early part of the evening when there is a church service) and when we have prayed together we are ready to die with you.
