No Abstract Available Now.
First released in 2002 by the Technology Standards for School Administrators collaborative, the National Educational Technology Standards for Administrators are indicators of what school and district leaders should know and be able to do to optimize the effective use of ICT in education. ISTE is proud to present the refreshed NETS+A, a consensus among educational stakeholders of what best indicates accomplished school leadership for comprehensive and effective use of ICT in schools.

Book Information

The screenshot shows the IGroup Library interface. At the top left is the IGroup Library logo. A search bar contains the text 'Search Result: NETS Project'. Below the search bar, there are navigation links for 'Previous Page', 'First Book', and 'Next Book'. The main content area displays the book cover for 'National Educational Technology Standards for Administrators' by the International Society for Technology in Education (ISTE), published in 2009. The book's ISBN is 1564842576 and its ISBN13 is 9781564842572. The subject is listed as Teaching, Education, Computer literacy, and Educational technology. A 'Description' section states that the standards were first released in 2002 and are indicators of what school and district leaders should know and be able to do to optimize the effective use of ICT in education. Below the book information is a 'Table of Contents' section with a 'Thumbnail Preview' and 'Export Formats' options. The table of contents lists 14 chapters, including 'National educational technology standards for administrators', 'Global learning in the digital age', 'Educators must lead', 'Leading the transformation of learning environments', 'Supporting a new generation of technology standards', 'Essential conditions', 'ISTE's educational technology standards for students', 'ISTE's educational technology standards for teachers', 'ISTE's educational technology standards for administrators', 'Connecting the NETS', 'Adapting the refreshed NETS-A for global use', 'Profiles and scenarios for digital-age administrators', 'Development team', 'NETS: A road map for systemic change', and 'Addendum'. On the left side of the page, there is a 'Suggestions' section with several book covers and titles, such as 'National educational technology standards for students, second edition', 'National educational technology standards for teachers, second edition', 'Differentiating instruction with technology in middle school classrooms', 'Security vs. access: balancing safety and productivity in the digital school', 'Teaching with digital video: Watch, analyze, create', and 'Information communication technology in education: Singapore's ICT masterplans, 1997-2005'. At the bottom left, there is a 'More' link.

Description :

First released in 2002 by the Technology Standards for School Administrators Collaborative, the National Educational Technology Standards for Administrators are indicators of what school and district leaders should know and be able to do to optimize the effective use of ICT in education.

ISTE is proud to present the refreshed NETS•A, a consensus among educational stakeholders of what best indicates accomplished school leadership for comprehensive and effective use of ICT in schools.

Global Learning in the Digital Age

Originally released in 2001, the ISTE National Educational Technology Standards for Administrators (NETS/A) followed on the success of the NETS for Students (NETS/S) and NETS for Teachers (NETS/T), defining the responsibilities of district and school leaders in the effective use of technology in education. Based on a national consensus among educational stakeholders of what best indicated effective school leadership for comprehensive and appropriate use of technology in schools at that time, the original standards directed public attention to the crucial role played by school administrators in bringing about successful implementation of

Leading the Transformation of Learning Environments

What does a changed system for learning look like? The following chart lists characteristics of promising traditional approaches to learning and corresponding strategies associated with new learning environments.

Traditional Environments	Emerging Learning Landscape
Teacher-directed, memory-focused instruction	Student-centered, performance-focused learning
Isolated, one-to-one technology programs	Flexible programs with multiple options
Unidirectional, single-view information	Modular, mastery-oriented
Knowledge from limited, authoritative sources	Logically constructed knowledge from multiple information sources and experiences
Isolated work on isolated events	Collaborative work on authentic, real-world projects
Mastery of fixed content and specified processes	Student engagement in selection, design, and management of projects
Factual, linear thinking for competence	Creative thinking for innovation and original solutions
In-school expertise, content, and activities	Global expertise, information, and learning experiences
Stand-alone communication and information tools	Converging information and communication systems
Traditional literacy and communication skills	Digital literacy and communication skills
Primary focus on school and local community	Expanded focus including digital global citizenship
Isolated assessment of learning	Integrated assessment for learning

Definitions

ICT: provides for information and communication technology. This acronym is used throughout much of the world in place of the word technology when referring to skills or standards for technology use.

Educational technology refers to the application of technology for learning.

In the U.S., a district refers to the superintendent of a school district—community leaders in other countries and other education officials—to the principal of a school building—community leaders in other countries as well as teacher, headteachers, or headteachers.

In the U.S., a district program often has an on-site-based staff such as curriculum, special programs, communication, assessment, financial, and facility directors. District-level technology directors with titles such as chief technology officer or technology coordinator should refer to the ISTE standards delivered through the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE). The role of district technology coordinator is addressed in the ISTE NETS/A Technology Leadership Standards, and the role of school-based leader for technology is addressed in the ISTE NETS/A Technology Facilitation Standards.

A context menu is open over the text, listing options: "Reset Selection", "Copy Text", "Crop Image", "Translate to", "Print", "Download", and "Search".

standards for students, teachers, and administrators to influence the direction of their districts, locally and globally.

Together, the NETS•S, NETS•T, and NETS•A provide a vision for how to transform schools into digital-age places of learning. They are meant to be demanding and transformative. At this point in time, technology plans need to be designed and used. However, in the future, as the refreshed NETS and technology become infused into instruction, ISTE and the education community will look to update the NETS again, reflecting the changes in technology, learning, and instruction.

ISTE (2008), ISTE acknowledges the globalization of education and the new standards in the NETS-S (2007). No longer can we benchmark teacher and student success on a local or national scale. Teachers must be ready to perform on a world-class level in this era of digital technology and innovation.

Education Must Change

Expectations are changing...
“Today’s kids think differently than we do. The speed of technological advances and the frantic pace of media delivery have changed what students expect from teachers and what they learn. To effectively reach these young people, teachers need technological tools to meet kids where they are and to engage them in school activities.”
Kimberly Vidoni, PhD
Educational Technology Coordinator
Nevada Department of Education

Teaching is changing...
“We can achieve so much more if we are actively engaged in professional learning communities. Teachers are empowered to collaborate with colleagues across the hall or halfway around the world as they explore strategies for advancing student learning and inspiring creativity and innovation— one student at a time.”
Trina Davis, PhD, ISTE President
Assistant Professor and

For that reason, the ISTE National Educational Technology Standards for Teachers (NETS•T) are strongly aligned with the NETS•S. The NETS•T build on the NETS•S by adding critical professional behaviors and responsibilities that must be embraced if we are to truly improve the teaching profession. The refreshed NETS•T are meant to transform education and provide students the opportunity to learn effectively for a lifetime and live productively in our emerging global society and increasingly digital world.

As technologies dramatically increase their penetration into our society, teachers need to demonstrate the skills and behaviors of digital-age professionals. Competence with technology skills is the foundation. To be part of the transformation to 21st-century teaching and learning, however, teachers need to lead by modeling effective ICT skills and lifelong learning strategies. Students need to see their teachers apply the basics in authentic, integrated ways that manifest in student experience solving problems, collaborating on projects, and creatively extending their abilities. It is these kinds of experiences that will help students meet the National Educational Technology Standards for Students (NETS•S) and prepare them as future workers, leaders, and contributing global citizens.
